Western countries would do well to establish governmental measures to promote the practice of using nonmotorized vehicles". Discuss.

There is a constant question in society nowadays about the environmental and health risks caused by using motorized vehicles. In spite of public complaints about the excessive involvement of the government in our private lives, it is irrefutable that increasing regulatory measures by a certain amount would bring about benefits to society.

This essay will discuss the supporters and detractors to this assertion, before arriving at a conclusion. There is no doubt that countries using non-motorized transport as a norm have a better level of health in the general population.

In Denmark, where most people cycle to work, it is reported that levels of heart disease and stroke are far lower than they are in other countries. Yet in spite of the health benefits, some would argue that the use of a bicycle as a means of transport must be a matter left to personal choice. We constantly hear objections from the public about 'nanny-state' policies that cause unnecessary governmental intervention and bureaucracy in our lives.

They claim, the choice of whether or not to use an environmentally-friendly form of transport should be a matter of individual conscience. But we only have to consider the rising levels of environmental damage around the world to understand that personal choice and individual conscience as a means to improving the environment have, in fact, been ineffective thus far.

One only needs to look at certain remote villages in the Far East, where the aspect of personal choice has been removed because motorized vehicles do not exist, in order to see that levels of air pollution and other forms of environmental contamination are far less in these villages than in so-called 'developed' countries. Consider the converse case, for instance, in the United States, where a heavy reliance on motor vehicles has resulted in the US being one of the largest emitters of greenhouse gases in the world.

Therefore, it is evident that a compromise needs to be reached in order to balance the limitations on personal freedom that can result from imposing governmental control over the issue, on the one hand, with addressing the very exigent concerns of cleaning up the world's environment and promoting healthy habits. amongst its inhabitants, on the other. After all, it is often stated that personal freedom of choice is the cornerstone of any democratic society. Perhaps the best solution to the issue at hand is to have the government provide certain incentives to those who decide not to use motorized vehicles. For instance, the government could offer rebates or subsidies on bicycle purchases.

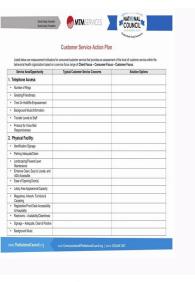

Another possible course of action would be to introduce certain governmental controls, but to establish those controls within very clear limits. Alternating car use by using the vehicle registration number has been an effective solution in certain countries. Under this scheme, car owners with odd-numbered registrations can use their vehicles on certain days of the week, while owners of vehicles ending in an even-number are permitted to use their vehicles only on the other days, and violating this policy would result in a fine or other sanctions. One thing is clear: whether by positive reinforcement, as in the first example, or by negative reinforcement as in the second, both remedies take into account the pressing concern of the state of the global environment, as well as protecting the need of the population for both personal health and individual freedom.

Magazine Article Analysis (sample essay by the instructor)

Twist magazine's "10 Sneaky Ways to Get a Guy by Tonight" provides a guide for teenaged girls to pursue boys through deception and indirect communication. In this essay, I will describe this article and analyze it from a social constructionist perspective.

The cover of the February 2003 issue of Twist features the come-on "Get a Guy by Tonight! You're Ready. He's Waiting." The article's emphasis on deception is revealed by the addition of the word "sneaky" in its actual headline. The suggestions vary in their level of deception. One of them involves an outright lie: buying two tickets to the movie and telling "your crush" that your best friend couldn't go because she has the flu. Others involve ploys to get yourself indebted to the boy, such as "accidentally" crashing into him on the dance floor, leaving your notebook in front of his locker for him to find and return, and intentionally losing a bet to him. Others appear more harmless, such asking to do something together, e.g., studying, getting a music lesson, without revealing your romantic intentions. The common theme of the suggestions is that high school girls are not supposed to ask guys out. Girls may initiate activities, but only by pretending that they aren't.

The article doesn't explain why girls are supposed to be sneaky. However, the implication of the article is that, for whatever reason, guys respond to these ploys. The article is found in the magazine's "All About Guys" section, which includes both information from guys ("Your Top 10 Valentine's Day Dates," "Do Guys Really Kiss & Tell"-in which a "panel" of five shirtless young men answer questions), stories from teenaged girls ("Your 8 Worst Crush Disasters Sorted"), advice ("He grabs my butt in

When working with newspapers and magazines, you will likely begin with an article, especially if you are using digitized newspaper and magazine collections, articles have authors, but the authors, are not always identified. Many articles are unsigned, by which we mean the author remains anonymous. The part of a newspaper article that identifies the author or authors is called the byline, which you can see in the example below. In a newspaper article, the byline will sometimes include the author or authors is called the byline, which you can see in the example below. In a newspaper article, the byline will sometimes include the author or authors is called the byline, which you can see in the example below. In a newspaper article, the byline will sometime anonymous. newswire service like the Associated Press?) and sometimes even the author's job title (e.g. Crime Reporter). If there is a byline, it can appear in different places--beneath the headline, or sometimes at the end of the article itself. There is no special name for the part of a magazine article that identifies its author, but as with newspapers, many magazine articles are unsigned. If the article is signed, the author's name can appear beneath the title, or at the end of the articles written by now-famous authors was so great, that scholars in the 20th century tried to provide attribution for as many of these unsigned articles as possible. The results of their work can be consulted in the Wellesley Index to Victorian Periodicals. Magazine articles often have titles, but not always. Sometimes, especially if the article forms part of a special section, it will be untitled. Newspaper articles technically do not have titles, but headlines. Headlines are not the same as titles is that a newspaper article reprinted from a newswire service like the Associated Press will often have completely different headlines, depending on the newspaper in which it is printed. The headline chosen for such an article will often have a dateline. An article's dateline is the part of the article that identifies the location from which the reporter filed the article. It can also refer to the date the article was filed with the newspaper, but the word primarily refers to the location. Not every article will carry a dateline, but if it does, you can use that information to decide how near the author was to the event he or she is reporting. For example, in the newspaper article below, we might interpret the reporter's information differently if the article carried a London or New York dateline. This comprehensive list includes feature length stories, roundups, personality profiles, research shorts, human interest and how-to articles. You'll be surprised by the variety of these different types of online and print magazine articles! Whether you're an aspiring freelance writer or an established author you'll find lots of ideas in this list. Learning about the different types of magazine articles is one thing. More important is finding courage to write boldly and the strength to do the work now before the day ends and you lose your momentum. The most important thing to remember when you're looking for different types of magazine articles to write is your audience. Learn how to slant your writing to the target audience, publisher, and editor of the magazine or publication. Books like Writer's Market: The Most Trusted Guide to Getting Published - are essential to your success. They reveal details and information for freelance writers that you won't find online. "You have to work hard and unremittingly, and sacrifice a great deal; and when you fall at, or fail to clear, an obstacle (usually an editor), you have to pick yourself up and go on." A crucial part of earning money as a freelance writer is knowing what to work hard on. Learning about the different types of magazine articles is an excellent way to start a freelance writing career, or even boost a faltering author's yearly income. If you're serious about selling your writing and making money writing, you need to be constantly learning about writing, getting published, and working with editors. "Two types of articles continue to dominate the changing field of magazine publishing," writes Nancy Hamilton in Magazine Writing: A Step-by-Step Guide to Success. "The personality profile and the how-to story with its self-help variant. Together, they account for an estimated 72% of magazine feature material."11 Different Types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magazine ArticlesI've been published in several different types of Magaz magazine articles...except for the exposé. My favorite is writing research shorts for magazines - but they are just that (short) and thus don't pay much. As you read through the following types of article to research and write. The best writing comes from writers who are enjoying their work and passionate about their topic, so don't hesitate to choose the project that lights your fire.1. "How To" Articles "Easily the most popular and the shortest and easiest to write, the how-to article with its self-help variant gives instructions for how to do or be something or how to do it better," writes Hamilton in Magazine Writing. "How to" articles: Make a rousing promise of successDescribe what you need in easy to follow instructions (sometimes with subtitles) Include shortcomings or warningsTell how to Write Magazine Articles That Editors Love to Publish" or "How Freelance Writers Earn a $100,000 Every Year" or How to Think Like a Magazine Editor - 8 Tips for Writers to submit their own photos for how-to articles. Before you accept an assignment from an editor, ask what their photo policy is.2. Profile and Interview ArticlesThis popular type of article describes a contemporary or historical person - but a profile doesn't have to be about a human being! Animals, communities, nations, states, provinces, companies, associations, churches can all be profiled (but not necessarily interviewed). Most Popular Types of Magazine Articles Personality profile, you use additional sources, such as friends, family, kids, neighbors, colleagues. In an interview, you talk to the source him or herself preferably in person. Can have a theme or focus. Can be presented as a "Q & A" or a written article sequire strong interview articles are: "The Real Writing Career" or "Anne Lamott Shares Her Secrets for Writing Different Types of Magazine Articles." Profiles and interview are two different types of magazine articles to write. About this type of magazine articles to write that experience the story directly without having to filter that experience through the 'I' of an unknown writer. Despite this common-sense perspective, many magazines today prefer the 'I' approach for personality profiles." Why? Because most editors want to encourage a personal relationship between the magazine and the reader by addressing them personally. Informative or Service Articles are also know as "survey articles." They often offer information about a specific field, such as sports medicine, health writing, ocean currents, politics, etc. Service articles offer a few pieces of good advice or tips, but aren't usually long or involved. Informative or service articles: Focus on one unique aspect, or the "handle" Describe what-to, how-to, when-to, whyto, etc. Answer the journalist's who, what, when, where, why, and how questions a sidebar Examples of this type of magazine article include: "How to Write for Magazines" or "10 Magazines" or "10 Magazines" or "10 Magazines" or "11 Types of Magazines article include: "How to Write for Magazines" or "10 Magazines" or "11 Types of Magazines" or "11 Types of Magazines" or "10 Magazines" or " informative or service article is similar to the how-to type of magazine article. I'd love to write a service article for the SPCA, but I'm too busy with my blogs to pitch article ideas to editors. 4. The Alarmer-Exposé is designed to alert and move the reader to action," writes Hamilton in Magazine Writing "Well-researched and heavy with documentation, this type of magazine article takes a stance and adopts a particular point of view on a timely and often controversial issue. Its purpose is to expose what's wrong here." Exposés: Shocks or surprises readersIncludes statistics, quotes, anecdotesCan range from how extension cords can kill to new info on Watergate "This article is best written by an established writer who is skilled in reporting an issue and building a case without flagrant - and apparent - bias," says Hamilton. Examples of an exposé magazine article are: "Stephen King's Ghostwriter Reveals Secret Writing Career" or "95% of Natalie Goldberg's Writing is From a Ghostwriter!" Those aren't actual feature articles that were written by freelance writers - they're just examples of the different types of magazine articles. Human Interest magazine articles are: "Anne Lamott Shares Her Secrets to Success as a Single Mother and Bestselling Author" or "Mark Twain's Great-Granddaughter Discovers a Brand New Type of hagazine Article." This type of feature article interests the majority of readers of a specific, niched magazine. People is currently one of the most popular magazines on the market, and it specializes in this type of feature article. If you find someone who has done or experienced something extraordinary - and if your writing skills are pretty good - you might consider sending a query letter to the editors at People.6. Essay, Narrative, or Opinion Articles This is my least favorite type of magazine article or blog post to write! I'm not a big writer of personal stories (nor do I like to read autobiographies, biographies, or personal blogs). I'd much rather encourage readers by sharing information - such as these 11 different types of articles to write magazines Essay, narrative, or opinion articles: Usually revolve around an important or timely subject (if they're to be published in a newspaper or "serious" magazine) Are harder to sell if you're an unknown or unpublished writerCan be found on blogs all over the internetHere's some great writing advice from Hamilton: "The narrative uses fiction technique to recreate the tension, the setting, the emotion - the drama - of something that actually happened. The article must have implications and ramifications that are meaningful to a reader. It must be relevant to what's going on today - one event that relates to the larger whole. "Examples of magazine article are: "What I Think of Natalie Goldberg's Decision to Retire From Her Writing Career" or "Anne Lamott's Most Famous Writing Mistakes." If you feel overwhelmed with all these types of magazine articles, read How to Write When You Have No Ideas.7. Humor or Satire Articles Humor or satire articles are really hard to write and produce a single episode! That's because humor writing seems easy and fast, but it's actually the hardest type of writing to learn...not to mention master. Humor or satire articles: Usually have a specific audience, such as the readers of The OnionAre usually written on spec (that is, you submit the whole articles might include: "Ode to Stephen King's Typewriter" or "What Margaret Laurence Ate the Day She Started Writing Articles for Magazines." Read How To Write Funny: Your Serious, Step-By-Step Blueprint For Creating Incredibly, Irresistibly, Successfully Hilarious Writing by Scott Dikkers if you want to learn how to write humor or satire articles for magazines. Dikkers is a master of comic writing; in this book he lays out a clear system for creating humor that gets big, "milk-coming-out-of-your-nose" laughs, reliably and repeatably. He shares the three sure-fire ways to generate material, 11 kinds of jokes and how to tell them, the secret to permanently overcoming writer's block, and more tips, tricks and techniques for writing funny articles for magazines and more. 8. Historical Articles What can I say? A historical article describes a moment in time. Or an epoch, Or an era, Or an eon, Historical articles wouldn't work as this type of article) Focus on a single aspect of the subject Are organized chronologically Tell readers something newGo beyond history to make a current connection Examples of this type of magazine article include: "The Typewriters Were Invented" or "How the Use of the Word 'Tweet' Evolved From 2005 to Now."9. Inspirational Magazine ArticlesDescribe how to feel good or how to feel good about yourself - this type of article can work for anyone from writers to pilotsOffer a moral messageFocus on the inspirational pointExamples of different types of inspirational articles for magazines are: "How You Can Change the World With Your Writing Career" or "13 Tips to Improve Your Writing Confidence."This is probably my second most favorite type of feature articles Gather a collection from many sources focus on one theme Offer quotations, opinions, statistics, research studies, anecdotes, recipes, etc. The Round-Up was one of my favorite types of magazine articles to Write for Magazines." I enjoy writing round-ups because I can squeeze in lots of information in 1,000 words.11. Research ShortsDescribe current scientific informationAre usually less than 250 words longAre often written on spec (at least by me)Are fast, effective ways to earn money as a freelance writer - if you can find the right marketsResearch Shorts for the "Front of the Book" are those little blurbs of scientific research you see at the beginning of many magazines. Examples of these types of articles for magazines include: "How Alliteration Affects Your Memory" or "What Anne Lamott's Writing Does to Your Brain Waves." Shorts aren't really a type of magazine article, but they're a great way to get your foot in the door and learn what articles editors will pay to publish. Types of Magazine Articles You Can WriteIn this video I share different types of articles, research shorts, human interest pieces, and "how to" articles. I also included examples of magazines that publish each type of article. Whether you're an aspiring freelance writer or an established author you'll find lots of ideas in this list. Here's a tip from bestselling author Natalie Goldberg about being a successful writer: "I hear people say they're going to write. I ask, when? They give me vague statements," she writes in Thunder and Lightning: Cracking Open the Writer's Craft. "Indefinite plans get dubjous results.
